Faith helps us overcome many of the anxieties of daily life.

In today's gospel reading, Jesus gives us an important example as to how we are to exercise our faith. As believers, we have an active expectation that Jesus will come again. This is the real important difference between those who believe and those who do not. Those who live without faith act as if this world is all there is. Their focus is on accumulating possessions and experiencing as much pleasure as possible. Sacrifice, giving to others, and patience mean nothing to them because they are living only for today. However, they live in fear because all these material things they cling to so dearly can easily be taken away from them.

Those of us who enjoy the gift of faith have an altogether different outlook. We know that this world and its pleasures are passing away. Our hope is set not on what this world can give us but on the eternal life promised to us by our Savior. We still need to work, to support our families and to prepare for the future, but we do so in trust knowing that God will provide for us. And if hardship or misfortune should come our way, we endure it with patience knowing that God is at our side and trusting that He will make all things work for our good. It is not an easy way to live, but it is a more fulfilling and happier life than this world can give. And it is ours if we stake our lives on God's promise.
